OVERVIEW

- Crude glycerine trades higher for Brazilian material
- Refined glycerine spot flat, new plant in Indonesia
- US court Wednesday rules Trump's global tariffs illegal

Asia's glycerine market saw further upside for Brazilian crude glycerine imports into China.

Brazilian spot availability was limited, with most of the cargoes having been sold earlier to other countries and regions.

Refined glycerine spot prices were flat on muted spot interest and thin discussions as buyers had largely covered their immediate requirements.

A new 55,000 tonne/year glycerine refining plant has also started operating in Indonesia.

Market players stayed on the sidelines and adopted a wait-and-see stance, with buyers and sellers mostly having completed their June-July business.

Regional suppliers had also mostly sold their June and July stocks.

In the meantime, a US court ruled on Wednesday that the president cannot impose global tariffs under an emergency act, voiding all but the sectoral ones that the nation imposed against nearly every country in the world. The Trump administration filed a notice that it was appealing the ruling.

Under the judgment issued by the US Court of International Trade, the US has 10 calendar days to withdraw tariffs including the 10% baseline tariffs against most of the world that the US issued during its so-called Liberation Day event on 2 April and the 20% tariffs the US imposed on imports from China intended to address the flow of illicit drugs.

The court gave the US 10 calendar days to comply with the order.

Prior to the US court ruling, southeast Asian leaders at the 46th ASEAN Summit in Kuala Lumpur on 26-27 May, Malaysia, expressed "deep concern" over the US's unilateral tariffs, particularly affecting Vietnam and Cambodia with rates of 46% and 49%, respectively.

OUTLOOK

- Uncertainties to prevail in short term despite US court ruling
- Buyers to stay on the sidelines to wait for clearer picture
- Downstream epichlorohydrin (ECH) prices may soften

Refined glycerine

Buying interest has waned as the transactions for June-July loadings have largely been completed.

Drummed shipments were largely traded at $920-1,000/tonne FOB SE Asia for the downstream home personal care, tobacco and food and beverage sectors.

Flexi-bagged shipments for the downstream industrial ECH sector were mostly within the $860-880/tonne CIF China range.

Crude glycerine

Spot prices were assessed $10-20/tonne higher, reflecting the current discussions and trades done.

Early July liftings of Brazilian spot material changed hands at $520-530/tonne CIF China for flexi-bagged cargoes.

Spot trades in southeast Asian material were mostly transacted at a higher price as they are duty free.

China and ASEAN has a free trade agreement.

Brazilian or Latin American product sold to China is subject to 6% import duty and typically cheaper than southeast Asian product because of its longer delivery timeline of five to eight weeks.
